Public works project gets $20 million

FROM WIRE REPORTS

WEST HARTFORD—State officials have kicked off a program that will generate $20 million for local public works projects from a fund that will be used to provide loans for housing and other social needs.

Representatives of about 130 of the state's 169 cities and towns were briefed Tuesday on the program by Gov. William A. O'Neill and other state officials at the University of Hartford.

The state has set aside $214 million in surplus funds in a fund that will be used to provide student loans, mortgages and similar programs with the interest going to provide grants to cities and towns for public works projects.

The program, developed by Senate President Pro Tempore Philip S. Robertson, R-Cheshire, is expected to generate about $20 million a year for road, bridge and other municipal public works jobs.

Each of the state's 169 cities and towns will receive money, with the amounts based primarily on a community's ability to pay for public works projects, and can use the money for some projects for which state aid is now not available.

"It hits some of the areas not covered by any other grant program," said Anthony V. Milano, secretary of the Office of Policy and Management, which is running the program.

Milano also said the program will require little paperwork by cities and towns, with the actual application for funds taking up only two pages.

"The state is not wrapping a lot of stings around the money," he said, adding that the first grants from the so-called Municipal Infrastructure Trust Fund will be made Feb. 1.

A 12-member board has been appointed to decide how to invest the $214 million in the fund.

Former ambassador Lodge dies at age 82

NEW YORK (COMBINED WIRE SERVICES)—Funeral services have not yet been arranged for former American ambassador John Davis Lodge.

The former ambassador, congressman and Connecticut governor who had previously been a matinee idol, is dead at age 82.

Lodge was stricken with an apparent heart attack while at a Women's National Republican Club dinner in his honor Tuesday night in New York City.

Like Ronald Reagan, Lodge was a former movie star and governor of a state. But unlike Reagan's humble beginnings, Lodge was born of the Massachusetts Lodges, and as expected, attended Harvard Law School for what appeared to be a predestined, distinguished law career.

But the tall, handsome grandson of Sen. Henry Cabot Lodge Sr. shocked Boston society when he married Italian dancer and actress Francesca Bragiotti in 1929 and went to New York as a young law clerk where she appeared in a Broadway show.

It was not until after World War II that Lodge, discharged from the Navy, turned to politics and began a career in Connecticut as congressman and that state's governor from 1951 to 1955.

In 1980, Lodge campaigned for Reagan against President Jimmy Carter. The victorious Reagan appointed Lodge U.S. representative to the United Nations and later, in 1983, as ambassador to Switzerland.

Previously, Lodge had served as ambassador to Spain and Argentina and as a congressman from Connecticut when he replaced Rep. Clare Boothe Luce.

Lodge and his elder brother statesman, Henry Cabot Lodge Jr., were the children of George Cabot Lodge and Matilda Frelinghuysen Davis Lodge.

George Cabot Lodge, a poet, died when his youngest son was only 6 years old.

Soviet emigration might be imminent

FROM WIRE REPORTS

MOSCOW—Western diplomats said yesterday that two Israelis—including a national airline official—have recently visited Moscow, spurring speculation that a dramatic increase in the number of Jewish emigrants might be imminent.

The reports came a day after a Soviet journalist with ties to the KGB secret police said the wife of Soviet dissident Andrei Sakharov had been granted her 18-month old request to leave the country.

One of the Israeli visitors was reportedly representing the Israeli national airline El Al. The visit fed recent rumors that the Soviet Union would allow a large number of Jewish emigrants to be taken out in an airlift.

"If you don't have any migrants or tourists, you don't need any air service," said one Western diplomat. "Perhaps they are planning some charter flights."

However, he also cautioned that the Israeli visits could have had a "quite mundane" purpose, with long-term implications rather than a sudden increase in exit permits for Jews.

The second Israeli representative to visit Moscow was identified as a specialist in property claims.

Moscow, as part of Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev's campaign to widen the Kremlin's influence in the Middle East, has made clear its desire for better relations with Israel. Relations were severed when Israel trounced Moscow's Syrian ally during the 1967 Six Day War.

Moscow would increase its chances for involvement in Middle East peace talks if it had diplomatic representation with both sides, as does the United States.

NEW HAVEN (AP)—A lawsuit filed in federal court claims the Army Corps of Engineers violated federal law in connection with the controversial North Haven Mall. The suit filed yesterday says the Corp failed to give developers of the suburban mall a chance to rebut statements of Gov. William O'Neill that helped doom the project.

NEW LONDON (AP)—Michael Ross will face just one trial in the murders of four women in New London County. Superior Court judge Seymour Hendel also ruled yesterday that Ross, a former Jewett City insurance salesman, is to undergo a psychiatric examination by the prosecution.

The 26-year-old Ross is scheduled to return to court Monday for argument of other motions in the case, including a state request for more information from the defense-hired psychiatrist.

IN OTHER NEWS

WASHINGTON (AP)—Congresswoman Nancy Johnson says Congress has directed the Defense Department to study allowing military contractors to buy ball bearings from foreign companies. The order is included in the report filed by the House Appropriations Committee to accompany the fiscal year 1986 Defense Appropriations Bill.

SPRINGFIELD, Pa. (AP)—Police in Springfield, Pa., say a woman wearing army fatigues and black boots opened fire on a crowd of shoppers at a shopping mall—killing a man and a four-year-old boy.

The police say the woman also wounded eight other people.

Beirut (AP)—The Soviet Embassy in Beirut says the three Soviet diplomats who were kidnapped a month ago were released today. A spokesman says they are in good shape after their ordeal. But no further details of the release were given.

ROME (AP)—Prime Minister-designate Bettino Craxi announced Wednesday he has reached an agreement to resuscitate his government, which collapsed two weeks ago over his handling of the Achille Lauro hijacking.

The Socialist leader and his four coalition partners succeeded in designing a "peace treaty" that resolves their differences over Craxi's handling of the cruise ship hijacking.

New building in 'maze'

By Dean Orser
Daily Campus Staff

After two years of what one authority called a "bureaucratic maze," administrators involved with a proposed addition to the Engineering II building said they hope to award a contract for construction within four months.

"At this point the contract will be awarded over the next three or four months," said Robert Clawson, director of facilities. "We're hoping to start construction in the spring."

Roger Vogler, assistant director of planning and engineering, said bidding was advertised in trade journals and newspapers at the beginning of October.

"They [construction contractors] submit their bids in sealed envelopes and on Nov. 6, they're opened," Vogler said.

Construction of the addition was to begin in May 1984, but was postponed until December 1984.

An article in March 19 The Daily Campus reported Michael Howard, associate dean of engineering, as saying the proposed construction in December 1984 was delayed because of, "...improved updates to the specific plans." Howard was also quoted as saying that August 1985 would be a "realistic target date."

But, he cautioned, then the state department of public works "may make changes again" which would delay the bidding process.

Public works' officials were unavailable for comment.

Clawson said the reason the project has taken so long is due to a 52-step procedure. "Currently we're about, I believe, at step 34 or 35, which means it's ready for bidding," he said.

Clawson said the 52-step process included everything from a number of changes in the architectural design to approvals from all departments involved.

According to Clawson and other officials, plans for the addition were initiated in December 1982 by the architectural firm of Moore and Salisbury. According to the March 19 article, the state department of public works, the office of facilities and the School of Engineering had sent the plans back and forth making the changes that each department desired.

Howard said, "It just takes a long time to get things approved and worked through."

The 4-story, 40,000 square foot addition is estimated to take 18 months to construct and will include 42 offices, more than 20 laboratories and two lecture halls.

Officials estimated the cost of the building at $5 million.

The building is to be constructed as an addition to the back of the Engineering II building, diagonally across from the main entrance of the Computer Center.

"All I can say is Amen!" Howard said. "Things of this size take a long time to work their way through the state system."

University cures backaches...

By Anna Mae Sholtes
Daily Campus Staff

Paul Conroy used to get backaches all the time.

Now, he is sleeping comfortably.

"They're great," said Conroy about new mattresses put into the residence halls.

During the summer, crews of students moved 9,000 mattresses from the residence halls and replaced them with new ones, Paul Brown, associate dean of student affairs, said. The work was completed by hand over a six-week period, Brown said.

The university got direct orders from the governor's office to replace the mattresses, Brown said. The state determined that the old mattresses needed to be updated for fire safety purposes. A fire last spring at a school in Southbury found the mattresses to be a fire hazard because they gave off too much smoke, Brown said.

"The mattresses were specified by state of Connecticut standards," Brown said. "We had no choice in what kind to get."

Students of Northwest Quadrangle said that.

Huskies eat at Huskies at 1:30 in the morning

By Mike Enright

Campus Correspondent

Huskies restaurant on 28 King Hill Road added "late-night" breakfast to their menu this past weekend. Breakfast is served at the popular eatery and bar on Saturday and Sunday mornings starting at 1:30 a.m. and running to noon.

"There is a market for breakfast in the Storrs area," said Allison Vibert, manager of Huskies. "Not many places are open for late-night breakfast, much less breakfast at all. So, we thought we would try it."

The menu consists of the usual breakfast items highlighted by eggs, french toast, pancakes, omelets and side order such as sausage and home fries.

Vibert said a tired student can pick up a hot breakfast for a relatively cheap price.

"Most of our items are in the one dollar range," Vibert said, "and we have several specials priced near $1.50."

Many students felt that the move to serve breakfast was to attract customers away from Thumper's, a new nightclub on Route 195.

"Thumper's has nothing to do with it," Vibert said. "I've been tossing around the breakfast idea in my head for more than a year. Plus, Thumper's doesn't even serve breakfast."

The first weekend of breakfast went very well, according to both Huskies and their customers.

"It was really fun," said Janine Graswald, a junior majoring in social services. "After going out with my friends all night, it was

Halloween to police 'just another night'

By Stuart Donner

Campus Correspondent

Campus police consider Halloween "just another night" and have no plans to increase security patrols around campus.

According to police Lt. Robert McKelvey, Halloween is nothing more than a routine Thursday night and the regular patrols will be "more than adequate."

The only real concern we have is for vandalism, but it's not that bad around here—it may be an on-going occurrence, but we don't expect any increases tonight," said

McKelvey.

While the campus police department is not offering any special services to detect tainted treats, they have issued a toll-free number to a national service hot line which will provide access to such information.

Sponsored by the International Association of Chiefs of Police, the hot line is to be used if there are any problems or suspicions arising from collected Halloween candy.

The number is 1-800-433-1200 and the information is free.

DRL committee to fight crime

By Gregg Jablonsky

Campus Correspondent

The Department of Residential Life has taken steps to combat crime on campus by forming a new committee designed to improve safety and security in residence halls.

The new committee will focus its efforts on investigating existing security in the 92 dorms and changing students attitudes towards security, according to Mary Beth Barry, property coordinator for the department.

Barry, who heads the committee, said that students can prevent crimes by taking steps such as locking their dorm rooms at all times, closing exterior doors that have been propped open, reporting strangers in the dorm, and reporting crimes. She said the committee will sponsor educational programs beginning with poster campaigns and working with residence hall staff to increase the importance of security awareness to students.

The committee comprising five members of Department of Residential Life, three police department representatives and two head residents, may eventually include student representatives, Barry said. She also said that the committee will make a report of recommendations to Carmen Vance, vice president for student affairs, as to changes they think are necessary. Barry said possible areas of investigation would be room locks, exterior doors and locks, ground floor windows, ledges and hedges.

The committee is not expected to be running full force until next semester because it will take time to conduct a thorough investigation into existing security measures, Barry said.

In three weeks, there will be a telephone survey of the about 9,500 students who live in residence halls to find out what they consider security problems.

'Survival of Humanity' re-offered

A "Survival of Humanity" course is being offered this spring for the second time. Robert Luyster, a philosophy professor, is teaching the course listed as Interdepartmental 297.

The course deals with nuclear energy, nuclear weaponry and other issues confronting humanity in the '80s. Last year, speakers included Nobel Prize winner George Wald, Bernard Feld, who co-invented the atomic bomb, and former presidential candidate, George McGovern.

This year, speakers tentatively include Vera Kistiakowsky, a nuclear physicist from MIT, Congressman Bruce Morrison from Connecticut's second district, Russian arms control expert Mikhail Chernikov, and from the Reagan administration, Frank J. Gaffey, deputy assistant secretary of defense for strategic and theater nuclear forces policy.

Third Floor Sousa Wenches
'Tis Halloween night
Oh what a fright
Come to the Fourth
And see a great sight
Head like a mouse,
And tall as a house
It might even scare you right out of your blouse
No place to run
No place to hide
Nowhere to go
But deep inside
So come to the Fourth,
Let's all get high
And we can feast
On your pumpkin pie
That's all for now
We'll see you then
Once you come
You'll come again.
Happy Halloween! The Redwoods

To Diane from Chandler who frisked me at the speakeasy party last

Ensemble to perform

The UConn percussion and brass ensemble will present a Halloween concert tonight in Von der Mehden Hall.

The concert begins at midnight and will feature J.T. Moyer, who will accompany some of the musical compositions with gymnastic, improvisational dance and break dancing.

Marty Kluger, professor of music, said admission will be free and encourages students to "come as they are."

The UConn ensemble will perform seven pieces including a finale which Kluger warned, "is a dangerous piece for the audience."

"People have been known to faint and have blood pressure problems because of the throbbing rhythm of the bass drums," he said.

The piece to which Kluger is referring is titled, "Lift-Off," and is supposed to simulate the sounds of rockets taking off, he said.

Kluger said the ensemble will begin the composition called "Fanfare for the Common Man," by Aaron Copland, and will be followed by two Colombian fanfares, an American medley and then "some funky stuff."

Teddy bear hospital cures cuts on the cuddly

Volunteers were busy with all the casualties that showed up at the Second Annual Teddy Bear Festival at Windham High School on Oct. 26. Eleanor Guinan and Carmela Mariotti, both volunteers of the McSweeney Senior Center spent the day sewing on new noses and eyes, and closing ripped seams on their patients at the Teddy Bear Hospital. Guinan said, "We have treated 38 bears so far, all without a whimper."

The teddy bear hospital was one of the activities at the Teddy Bear festival which was sponsored by the McSweeney Senior Center. Sixty vendors filled the Windham High School cafeteria displaying their array of teddy bears, and arts and crafts. Other activities at the fair included face painting, a teddy bear hair salon, a teddy bear contest, and children's corner where movies of bears were shown, and crayons and pictures of uncolored bears were provided.

The vendors came from as far away as California to show their wares. One vendor,

Mary Ann Rhoads, owner of two stores in California came straight from a teddy bear convention in Minnesota. Teddy bears are so popular because "they give people a sense of security," Rhoads said. She later pronounced the day, "A good day for selling teddy bears."

The McSweeney Senior Center is a multi-purpose institution serving the ten town Windham region. The center offers such services as dental, health, dietary, and social and recreational facilities to its members.

Cathy Brady, service coordinator for the McSweeney Center, estimates several thousand of the area's residents use the facility.

Mary Lewis, a UConn student attending the festival said, "I like them because they are cuddly. I like the big soft furry ones best."

...late-night breakfast

nice to just sit down and relax and have a few more laughs."

"This past weekend went well," Vibert said. "I had plans for it to do better, but even if business stays at the same pace, we'll be able to keep breakfast going."

Vibert, a 1985 UConn graduate, was pleased with the reactions of the customers to putting down the alcohol at 1:30 a.m.; the legal closing time, and picking up their breakfast forks.

"Everyone understands about the legal closing time," Vibert said. "If they don't, we explain it to them. It's nice because if people feel they have been partying too much, they can sit down and enjoy a cup of coffee and relax."

...new mattresses in dorms

"the new mattresses are bigger so our old lofts don't fit anymore. They're more comfortable but now you're too close to the ceiling."

"Roughly, it cost one million dollars for the new mattresses," Brown said, "and the state of Connecticut paid for them. The cost for the labor of taking the mattresses in and out was absorbed by the Department of Residential Life."

"Student crews moved mattresses instead of painting," Brown said. "Only half of the painting that was supposed to be done in the summer was completed. We were informed in late April about the mattresses and they had to be changed."

"That's why only half of North Campus was completed," Brown said. "Next summer we have to do next summer's work plus this past one's." All of Grange, Hicks, and North Campus will be painted next summer, Brown said.

Another addition to the University's residence halls was carpeting for the lounge and hallway areas. Many students questioned why the carpet was put down now instead of during the summer.

The university planned on carpeting the dorms during the summer but had to wait until a contract for carpeting was renewed. "The new contract turned out for the best," Brown said. "We went from a limited carpet selection to a more selective group of carpets."

"There was a two-month lag between contract renewal," Brown said. "We had to face the question of do we put it off a whole year or create some inconvenience to the students, but get the job done."

"Instead of waiting a whole year, we tried to create as little inconvenience as we possibly could," Brown said. "We had to work around 3,000 students to put the carpet down."

"It's nice not to walk on the cold floor," said one student, "but I think it was a waste of money. You can't keep it clean. Janitors used to mop, sweep, and wax the tile, but now they don't even bother to vacuum the carpet."

"I don't think it's a waste of money," Brown said. "We're trying to build our facilities up to modern-day standards."

Carpeting was not put down years ago due to floor parties which caused a lot of spillage. Now is a good time to carpet because there aren't as many parties, Brown said.

The Department of Residential Life is also trying to improve dorm life by putting radiator valves in each room.

One student from North Campus said, "The heat blasts through the rooms and the windows have to be opened in the winter. The bathrooms are cold and in the rooms you sweat to death."

"This valve gives you the ability to control the heat a little more," Brown said. It isn't the definitive answer. It's just one step."

Grad student wins Covenant Award

A graduate student in the new industrial-organizational section of psychology has received the $1,000 Covenant Award for outstanding performance.

Robert P. Mahan, a native of Roseville, CA, is a doctoral candidate whose work is in the area of human engineering. Jerome Smith, head of the psychology department, said that Mahan is studying the effects of shift work on the worker.

Mahan came to UConn this year to complete his Ph.D. studies which began at the Illinois Institute of Technology.

Mahan received his bachelor's degree in neuroscience from Humboldt State College in Arcata, CA, where he also earned a master's degree.

The Ballad of the Bats

By Derek Gray
Daily Campus Staff

805 With goblins, ghoules and ghosties
Bats are feared not the least.
They say on cold, dark Halloween nights
Upon your blood they'll feast.

They'll dip down from the darkness,
These hairy, hellish pets,
And bring to life your nightmares
By latching to your neck.

"That's all just a bunch of old wives' tales,"
Bob Dubos explained patiently.
He is a bat expert,
And works for the Museum of Natural History.

The bats which live in Connecticut
Will not attack, Dubos said.
They only feed on insects
And are no cause for dread.

Of the seven species in the state,
Four are "solitary,"
Which means they tend to live alone.
(But don't they ever marry?)

But seriously, they live in the woods
And hang under the bark.
They sleep until the night comes,
Then feed when it is dark.

Of the others living in the state,
Colonial is their brand.
"They can be in large colonies," Dubos said,
"Sometimes numbering in the thousands."

They hibernate in caves, he said,
Flying north for the winter.
They're active around dawn and dusk
And tend to feed together.

It is these bats, Dubos said,
That give rise to rabies fears.
Because some may attack when disturbed,
Several cases are reported every year.

To get rabies from these bats,
You need not be bit.
Just its saliva in an open cut
Is enough to do the trick.

Rabies from bats can be fatal,
Indeed, quite severe.
That's why Dubos has had three shots
And gets a booster every two years.

Now, about a bat's appetite,
You could not say it's light.
A bat will eat more than half its weight
In insects every night.

They can see in total darkness,
These most amazing creatures.
A kind of sonic "radar,"
Its most distinguishing feature.

By reflected vocal vibrations,
In pitch-black, it could find its way.
And a bat has good eyesight
In sunlight, anyway.

Bats do a great service.
This world they protect.
They even help our economy
By destroying insect pests.

But some bats around the world
Eat food and cause pain.
One such kind is the vampire bat.
The blood of livestock it will drain.

It is said that Count Dracula
Would turn into a vampire bat.
Although there was a Count Dracula,
Don't believe that.

Vampire bats live in the tropics,
Far away from Transylvania.
You won't find them around here, either,
Let alone in Romania.

But they do sneak up on animals.

And they do puncture the skin.
And they do stay there lapping
The blood that flows within.

One summer Dubos was in Paraguay
And saw vampire bats attack a horse.
Dubos then slept under netting
To keep the bats out, of course.

When Dubos took out his specimens,
It really was a sight.
These small, flying mammals
Can give you quite a fright.

There were over 1,000 of them
And they looked like winged mice,
With little, furry bodies
And little, beady eyes.

He had a great variety,
And some seemed quite rare.
There were red bats with red fur
And hoary bats with "frosted" hair.

He had as many vampire bats
As anyone could wish.
And then he showed a hook-clawed bat
That only feeds on fish.

When he revealed a bat with a pugged nose
And hideous, devilish ears,
It was easy to see why bats can be
The cause of so many fears.

Bats have been around for eight million years,
Looking much as they do today.
They're the only flying mammals,
And it's doubtful they'll go away.

You'll have to learn to live with the bats.
You, they probably won't kill.
But they may stay here to breed your fear
And drive you "batty" (if you will).

Real witches contradict myths

By Lauren Ungaro
Daily Campus Staff

The typical witch was a pimply-nosed, green-tinged aberration, right?

Not so, said Barbara Rosen, assistant professor of English at UConn.

Rosen, who has done extensive research on 16-17th century witchcraft in England, said English witches were rather quiet, unobtrusive women who usually lived alone.

Rosen distinguishes 16-17th century witchcraft from devil worship. Witches "never worshipped the Devil," and did not practice their art on others, Rosen said. She defines witchcraft as an unorthodox, "offbeat way of getting what you want."

Her interest in witchcraft started "a long time ago," Rosen said. "It was the McCarthy trials that got me interested. They really replicated the conditions of the Salem witch trials," of early colonial America, during which "it was impossible to prove you were innocent."

Most women branded witches, and executed had been accused of putting curses on people, Rosen said. "A lot of the power (witches) were supposed to have come from the fact that people were afraid." She gives a hypothetical example showing how a woman might have come to be accused of witchcraft.

Rosen said to imagine the following: you live in a village, there is a very poor woman who lives there alone. Everyday she goes begging, and one day you have nothing to spare, so you refuse her. The woman says, "You'll wish you never said that." "That leaves you very nervous," Rosen said. After that, you may perhaps blame the woman for both mishaps and tragedies that befall you.

"People do see what they expect to see, don't they?" Rosen said.

Rosen makes several speculations about the Salem witch trials. She said they were initiated at the behest of Puritan adolescents who were expected to grow up very quickly and, under this pressure, "became quite hysterical at times."

She said that some of the Salem children went to the woods and "undoubtedly played games," perhaps under the tutelage of the slave Tituba, whom Arthur Miller immortalized in The Crucible.

She speculates that "some (children) enjoyed pretending to be possessed by evil spirits. Some felt they really were possessed...Then everyone became terrified."

Jealousy may also have been a motivating factor during the trials. "Independent women, or women with property, were disproportionately accused of witchcraft," Rosen said.

Rosen added that the Salem church that led the investigation later admitted it had acted unfairly. This is the only instance she knows of in which such executions concerning witchcraft were openly repented.

Senators hear 'Jingle Bells'

WASHINGTON (AP)—It was Christmas in October. Or rather, it was a pointed reminder from Senate majority Leader Robert Dole that Christmas is coming and that the Senate has miles to go before it celebrates.

Dole gathered a cluster of youthful pages in the meeting room of the Senate Republican conference last week and launched them into a chorus of "Jingle Bells."

He said he hoped senators got the point.

It is the time of year when most senators want to get out of town as soon as possible, preferably well before Thanksgiving.

And other senators, exploiting that impatience, erect legislative "Christmas trees," adorning selected items of must-pass money bills with a sparkling assortment of wish-list amendments.

Dole's assistant, Sen. Alan K. Simpson, R-Wyo., calls it the "Christmas Crunch."

And he says it reminds him of the annual and inevitable ritual dance of Wyoming's "rather fascinating bird called a sage chicken."

"It plumps itself up and struts and goes through what would be best called a primitive mating dance," Simpson said.

"It is rather fascinating to watch," he told the Senate. "It is annual. It comes without question."

Apparently, as the sage chicken goes, so goes the Senate.

"The Christmas Crunch is something we say will never happen again," Simpson said. "We say that we are going to

POW and wife recall life of captivity

CORONADO, Calif. (AP)—Ask Jim Stockdale which Christmas he spent in Puerto Rico and you'll get a blank stare. Ask him which Christmas he spent in leg irons and the memory flows.

It was actually two Christmases—in 1967 and 1968 when he was a prisoner in Hanoi during the Vietnam War.

Ask Sybil Stockdale what she remembers most about her husband's confinement and she'll tell you about fall 1970, the five-year mark she'd hoped would never come.

It's been 20 years since Stockdale, a highly decorated navy officer, was shot down over North Vietnam, and almost 13 years since he returned to the Coronado home where his wife and four sons spent eight years in a prison on their own.

The couple has written a book about the ordeal called In Love and War. It was published in hard cover last year by Harper & Row.

"We felt it was important to have the truth in writing and to keep the record straight," said Mrs. Stockdale, whose frustration in dealing with government bureaucracy during her husband's imprisonment led her to start a national lobbying and support group for families of war prisoners.

"As one person said, we included the warts of the story," said Stockdale, who walks with a stiff left leg as the result of two breaks—one while parachuting from his stricken aircraft and the other while being tortured in prison.

Stockdale harbors no bitterness toward the U.S. government or his captors. If anything, he said, it was his lack of belligerence that probably saved his life during the eight years in prison.

He credits publicity surrounding his wife's lobbying efforts on behalf of POWs with his captor's decision to save his life after a suicide attempt in September 1969.

Mrs. Stockdale said she started the National League of Families of American Prisoners Missing in Southeast Asia out of frustration in trying to get the government to first acknowledge her husband was a prisoner, and then to acknowledge the prison torture described in secretly coded letters Stockdale sent from prison.

Stockdale retired from the Navy in 1979 after more than 30 years as an officer. He is now a Senior Research Fellow at Stanford University's Hoover Institution and teaches undergraduate philosophy courses at the university.

Mrs. Stockdale teaches dyslexic children at a private school but has taken a leave of absence to answer the hundreds of letters the couple said they've received in response to the book. Surprisingly, they said, none of the government officials portrayed in a less than a flattering manner have contacted them.

get out on Oct. 1, then we say Oct. 15, then we say Nov. 1, then we say Nov. 15, then we say Thanksgiving, then we say 'maybe' Dec. 1."

With a pile of unfinished legislative business, the current session is on a collision course with Christmas itself, said Simpson.

And one of the reasons, he said, is that throughout the year senators are forever slipping away on Mondays and Fridays, making theirs a three-day work week.

As assistant majority leader, or whip, the senator's prime duty is to keep the Senate running and Republican troops mustered for action.

But sometimes, the senator sighed, "I think that whip is about as rigid as an elongated noodle."

Aging with Halloween

Our attitude toward Halloween, it seems, is subject to many changes as we grow older. Because it's the most eventful holiday that doesn't tend to center on the family, our 'growing up' process plays a large role in how we treat Hallowed Eve.

AGE 4: Out trick-or-treating for the first time, the child—dressed as Casper the friendly ghost—is confused. "Why am I doing this?" she wonders, dragged by over-eager parents. At a friend's house the parent and child stop, talk and pick up candy, which makes the girl happy but even more confused. By the time she gets home she's too tired to care. Good night.

AGE 7: By this time the girl—we'll call her Sarah—has a pretty good idea how Halloween works. Mostly remembering last year, when she dressed as a lightbulb and was the hit of the neighborhood and got a year's supply of candy, she begs her Mom to let her out alone, with just her friends as guardians. Leaving at 5:30, the girl's group has a portable party, loving every minute of it.

AGE 11: The economic age. Dressed simply—and, more importantly, cheaply—as a hobo, the girl and her friends figure out the most efficient way of canvassing the neighborhood and some surrounding state to make the night a profitable one.

AGE 13: The girl—now in the "I'm too mature for that" stage—stays in and hands out candy to the "children" of the neighborhood. Later she babysits her baby brother as her parents go to the Knights of Columbus Halloween Ball.

AGE 14: At the urging of her parents, the girl dresses up as The Great Pumpkin—complete with dark green tights—to attend a CYO dance. Totally humiliated, she manages to go to the event, but spends most of the time in the bathroom.

AGE 16: It's a great excuse to put on loads of make-up and act sleazy. About the last thing Sarah wants to do is look cute. She goes to a Halloween party in a parking lot (one of her friends just got his license) and downs a pint of vodka before stumbling into the Masquerade at the high school. If she's lucky, the guy driving stays sober enough to keep her alive the whole night and drop her off at home, where her anxious parents await with chewed-down fingernails.

AGE 20: Dressing up with five of the girls from her dorm as a six-pack of Budweiser, Sarah figures this is a great excuse to play keep-away from the library. After drinking the case of beer they used as a model, the sextet goes to a local bar to warm up, and then to the costume contest on campus, followed by an off-campus party.

AGE 28: Now an over-eager parent herself, Sarah drags her four-year-old boy—who is dressed as He-man—around the neighborhood. He wonders, "Why am I doing this?"

Vietnam valentine is a lesson in love

In 1966 an 8-year-old girl named Beverly Kraft was sitting in her third-grade classroom in Illinois. The teacher was talking about a place called Vietnam.

The teacher said that American soldiers had been sent to Vietnam; the teacher tried to explain what this meant. Beverly Kraft, like the other children in the class, was confused; she had never heard of the place.

The teacher said that the young American soldiers were far away from home—far away from their friends and their families. Valentine's Day was coming up; the teacher said it would be a nice idea if the children made Valentines for the soldiers in Vietnam. It would be a class project.

So Beverly Kraft, like the other third-graders, sat at a desk and—using construction paper, scissors and paste—made a red-and-white Valentine to send to Vietnam. When all of the children had completed their Valentines, the teacher gathered the cards up and said they would be shipped to the soldiers. Beverly Kraft wrote a message on the card and signed it with her name and address.

A month or so passed. One day there was a letter for Beverly Kraft in the mail. It was postmarked from Portland, Ore.; it was from the mother of a soldier in Vietnam.

The mother—Mary Carlson—said that her son, Roger, was with the Army in Vietnam. Roger had ended up receiving the card that Beverly Kraft had sent; it made him so happy—the knowledge that people back home were thinking about the soldiers—that he mailed the card to his mother to show her. And now Mrs. Carlson wanted the little girl in Illinois to know how much she appreciated it, too.

Beverly Kraft wrote back to Mrs. Carlson. At Christmas, Mrs. Carlson sent Beverly a card, so Beverly sent her one, too. The next Christmas, another card from Mrs. Carlson in Oregon arrived at the Kraft home. And the Christmas after that.

The cards have never stopped coming. For almost 20 years, the mother of the soldier has sent a Christmas card to Beverly Kraft, out of gratitude for making that one little Valentine in a third-grade classroom.

"We've never even spoken on the phone," Beverly said the other day. Her name is Beverly Kraft Sherman now; she is 27 years old and married, with a baby son of her own. "I just think it's so remarkable, that this woman would take the time to remember me after all these years."

She said that, as a third-grader, she had known virtually nothing about world politics. "But this taught me a lesson, about how families care for their children when those children get wrapped up in the results of political decisions. Mrs. Carlson made it clear to me that she was very moved that a little girl her family had never met had cheered up her son while he was stationed in a dangerous place halfway across the world.

"Her Christmas cards always are mailed early," Beverly said. "This year she knew I was pregnant with my first child, so she sent me some money to be put away for the baby. She sent me three one-dollar bills. It was just such a sweet thing for her to do."

I got in touch with Mary Carlson in Oregon. She told me that she is now 70 years old.

"Yes, I still send the cards every year," Mrs. Carlson said. "Beverly was just a little girl when I started. I first sent her a thank-you card because I was so impressed that a little schoolgirl in Illinois would take the time to make a Valentine for a soldier in Vietnam. Roger had liked it so much that he had mailed it to me so that I could look at it."

"The boys were having a rough time over there. The cards really cheered them up. When Roger wrote me, he told me how pleased he was to have heard from that little girl. There was no way I was not going to write her and thank her."

Mrs. Carlson said that her son is married with his own family now. "As a mother, it meant something to me, that someone had cheered my son up. Every little token of kindness meant so much to those soldiers, and I thought that what that little girl did represented a golden thought."

She said that she plans to keep sending Christmas cards to Beverly Kraft Sherman as long as she lives. "Of course I'll keep writing her," she said. "What she did for my boy still means a lot to me."

I got back to Beverly Kraft Sherman and told her that I had made contact with Mrs. Carlson. She was fascinated; I told her all about our conversation, and about the gratitude Mrs. Carlson still feels toward her.

"You know, I never quite understood that," Beverly said. "But when my son Benjamin was born seven months ago, everything changed for me, in the way I look at the world. All of a sudden I can understand what Mrs. Carlson was feeling about a stranger who did something that made her son feel a little better."

"I guess that's what happens as time goes by. Now I'm a mother with a son of my own. And thinking about Mrs. Carlson as one mother to another, it all starts to make sense."

Dr. Ruth's game of good sex

When I was 11 years old, Susan Livingstone, one of my sixth grade classmates, told me about sex. She described the procedure in some detail. I thought it was the most ridiculous thing I'd ever heard. People would never do anything that stupid, I told her. It was clear to me she'd made up the whole thing. I refused to believe her.

Fortunately, sex itself is generally less absurd, and far less complicated, than "Dr. Ruth's Game of Good Sex." Here is an excerpt taken from one paragraph in the instructional brochure: "To move a pawn to an inner oval, both partners must have their Arousal Markers at the same color of their Arousal Tracks (or higher) as the new oval. For example, when a couple's Arousal Markers have reached the green level of their Arousal Tracks, they can move their pawn by the next white arrow to the 'In the Mood' (green oval); even if one partner's marker is in the orange or red section of the Arousal Track and the partner's marker is still in the green section, the couple continues to move their pawn around the green oval."

I'm not sure what, exactly, is the point of "Dr. Ruth's Game of Good Sex." It's described in the brochure as "fun" and "informative." Before I tried playing it I assumed it was meant also to kindle in its players some interest in sex. But by the time my Arousal Marker had reached the green "In the Mood" oval I was not only not in the mood I was almost persuaded that Susan Livingstone had indeed been lying to me.

Perhaps that's the idea. Maybe "Dr. Ruth's Game of Good Sex" is an ingenious new method of birth control that works by making sex seem too ridiculous to attempt.

I thought of that conversation with Susan the other night as I sat around with some friends trying to figure out how to play "Dr. Ruth's Game of Good Sex." I may have been wrong back then, in the sixth grade, but my instincts were good. Sex really is a preposterous activity when you think about it in the abstract, in theory, and especially, apparently, when you turn it into a board game. Dr. Ruth Westheimer may be a successful sex counselor, and she's certainly an entertaining personality, in small doses, but her acclaimed common sense must have been out to lunch the day she lent her name to this sexual variation of Trivial Pursuit.

Letters to the Editor—

Students not 'blue collar'

•Why does the Daily Campus persist in ridiculing art students? I am referring to Wednesday's and Thursday's paper (10/23-10/24) that contained the photographs of "Blue-Collar Sculptor" and "The Play-Doh Alternative." The first appeared under a photograph of an art student using heavy machinery, the latter showed two art students working at pottery wheels.

Because we may use brushes, cameras, porcelain, or bar-saws instead of calculators and slide rules, the general university population has a distorted perception of art students already. We don't need the Daily Campus to add to their notions that we are blue-collar workers or children at play.

"You have it so easy! No mid-term exams, no text books!" "Your homework isn't hard. All you have to do is draw." These are frequent accusations the art major is faced with.

It is obvious that you either find this very funny or you are completely ignorant of what goes on inside the art department.

Art majors take enough abuse. We don't appreciate being publicly referred to as children or blue-collar workers.

U2's is not the only 'real' music

•This is in reference to the article of October 24, titled "Madonna lost face at band convention...U2?"

Miss Janusch's article should not have been written so cursorily, but rather, with a bit more circumspect, as a competent journalist would have. She not only spoke disparagingly of musicians such as Prince, Wham, and Madonna, but proceeded to ridicule and stereotype their fans. Apparently, journalism is not Miss Janusch's forte.

She presented a rather plebian argument concerning the "seriousness with which Prince, Madonna, etc. present and write the lyrics to their music. Obviously, Miss Janusch has yet to realize that one needn't be quite so literal and analytical concerning the basic pleasures of life (of which I happen to think music is one).

I will agree that the band U2 is very talented; however, I would not say that they alone write 'real' music. By many people, their lyrics may be considered depressing (if not soporific.) There are bands whose musical talents are dedicated to the raising of spirits and animating those who listen to it.

My advice to Miss Janusch is rather simple. With the use of such philistine judgement in journalism, you will go everywhere except toward success.

Perlman's audience was a failure

•On Monday, October 21, you published an article on Itzhak Perlman's recent performance at Jorgensen. The author was obviously touched by the magic that fills the air when Perlman is on stage; I am sure he found the concert to be a success. But I think the article offered only half of the story, that is, though Perlman was a success, I think the audience was a failure.

At least some of the blame for our failure can be attributed to Jorgensen's lack of organization. Programs were not made available to many of the audience because the ushers ran out early. Without programs, some of us clapped whenever there was an extended silence. A silly issue to bring up? not at all. Classical music is supposed to envelope the listener entirely. Every silence (i.e. between movements) is meant to remain silent; it is essential to the mood and tone of the transition. Wild outbursts of enthusiastic applause at the wrong time wrench us away from the mood, therefore ruining the unity of the piece. I do not think I was imagining things when I noted an impatient look on Perlman's face as he waited for us to shut up so he could go on.

Such untimely applause occurred often throughout the performance. And, if that alone was not disconcerting enough for the serious listener, then certainly the mistaken intermission must have rattled a few nerves. For a moment, in between pieces, Perlman stepped off stage. A quick glance at the program would have informed listeners that he would be right back, as he had another piece to play before intermission. But, many had no programs, and, in their haste to hit the ladies' room before the rush, they were well on their way when the music began again. How frustrating it must have been for Perlman to play while his audience pushed and talked and shuffled their way back to their seats! I was embarrassed for all of them.

I thought, as I was leaving Storrs, "Yes, Perlman is a genius. I wish I had stayed home and watched the basketball game."

Autograph a skilled up-and-coming talent

Daily Campus Staff

*Nothin's better than the feeling of a six string in your hand
It's the only thing that matters
It's the world at your command
"Six String Fever"
Autograph
That's the Stuff
RCA*

Early 1985 saw the debut of a band called Autograph. Although their first album—Sign In, Please—posed little threat to Bruce Springsteen's domination of the number one spot, it was a great album nonetheless.

It not only paved the way for future efforts by placing in the Top 40 for a number of weeks, but also scored a minor hit with "Turn Up the Radio." Now, Still fighting for their much due recognition, this five-man band takes another shot at the number one spot with the release of That's the Stuff.

Their second album, That's the Stuff opens with its title track. The song, a very appropriate one for the band, is about seeing others hitting it big and trying to do the same themselves ("That's the stuff—dreams are made of..."). The "don't give up" attitude of the song is inspiring, and will hopefully keep Autograph going until it's their turn at the top.

"Take No Prisoners," the second track off the album is a song about a life dedicated to having fun. It exemplifies the anti-nine-to-five, party-all-night attitude held by many entertainers (and college students), but does so in a fun-oriented way.

"Blondes In Black Cars" is the first release off That's the Stuff. It is a song about going out and picking up girls; sort of 1985's answer to Van Halen's "Beautiful Girls" (much in the same way as was "Summertime Girls" by Y & T, a minor hit this past summer).

Lead guitarist Steve Lynch cuts loose with "Hammerhead," a two minute guitar solo, and "Six String Fever," a song about a boy obsessed with playing the guitar, co-written by Lynch and lead vocalist/guitarist Steve Plunkett.

Autograph shows its versatility with "Changing Hands," a mellow song detailing the loss of a lover to

Special midnight concert tonight in VDM

The UConn percussion and brass ensemble will present a Halloween concert tonight in Von der Mehden Hall.

The concert begins at midnight and will feature J.T. Moye, who will accompany some of the musical compositions with gymnastic, improvisational dance and break dancing.

Marty Kluger, professor of music, said admission will be free and encourages students to "come as they are."

The UConn ensemble will perform seven pieces including a finale which Kluger warned, "is a dangerous piece for the audience."

"People have been known to faint and have blood pressure problems because of the throbbing rhythm of the bass drums," he said.

The piece to which Kluger is referring is titled, "Lift-Off," and is supposed to simulate the sounds of rockets taking off, he said.

Kluger said the ensemble will begin the composition called "Fanfare for the Common Man," by Aaron Copland, and will be followed by two Columbian fanfares, an American medley and then "some funky stuff."

The Danse Macabre by Sant Saens, is a special arrangement for xylophone, Kluger said. "It's a piece of music about all the Halloween spirits that come out to dance on this night, and are interrupted by the sunrise; they then flee, not to return until the next year."

J.T. Moye will dance to the "Danse Macabre" and to "Lift-Off."

Other pieces include Steve Reich's "Music for Pieces of Wood," which is played by five percussionists playing a pair of claves (sticks of wood that are clicked together), and "Adagio for Strings," by Samuel Barber.

Snake Man publishes new book

Professor Balaji Mundkur doesn't want to be known as a snake man, but he recently slid into the limelight by intertwining the humanities and the sciences in his book, The Cult of the Serpent.

Mundkur, as associate professor of biology, will be the guest of honor at a panel discussion on animal symbolism in Southampton, England, in September, 1986, held by the World Congress of Archaeology and International Union of Prehistoric and Protohistoric Sciences. The Congress meets every four years.

The Cult of the Serpent, published in 1983, examines the serpent's place in mythology and religion, both modern and primitive, psychological theories of man's sensitivity to the snake and the serpent's place in the evolution of human behavioral development. Mundkur's book is unique because it examines both the biological and cultural aspects of the serpent cult.

In their invitation to Mundkur, organizers of the panel said his work on the serpent cult worldwide raised profound questions for anthropology, including old and unresolved problems of human evolution.

Mundkur, who says he has always been interested in the humanities, delved deeper into the area after a series of eye operations hampered his ability to see through a microscope. However, Mundkur says he still thinks like a biologist—that is, he doesn't take things at face value. He says he used this view while researching and writing his book.

In the eight years it took Mundkur to write The Cult of the Serpent, his research took him to many museums and libraries and through many discussions with experts and scholars. His work brought him much praise and, as recently as 1984, other scholars, including Harvard sociobiologist Edward O. Wilson, used Mundkur's book as a source of information in their own writing.

Mundkur has been a professor at UConn for 20 years. From 1976-1978 he was a visiting fellow at Yale University's art history department, where he studied art history, particularly Mexican art.

Mundkur now teaches a course at UConn on the religious art of India. He also teaches and interdepartmental course on animal cults and a course on religious symbols.

Concert canceled

Jack Cohan, director of UConn's Jorgensen Auditorium, today announced the cancellation of the concert by the Dresden Philharmonic Orchestra, which had been scheduled for the facility on Friday, Nov. 1st. The cancellation was due to "political problems" encountered by the orchestra, according to Cohan.

Tickets which were issued for the Dresden concert will be honored at the door on November 10th.

Prefab Sprout's newest album Two Wheels Good has hit the record stores. Watch for a review soon in these pages. In the meantime, meet the band: on the motorbike, Paddy McAloon, Wendy Smith; standing, Martin McAloon, kneeling, Neil Conti.

another man. "Crazy World," the last track on side one, describes the uncertainty we encounter in the real world. It is a song that reflects on what the future has to offer, but, unfortunately, it loses some of its impact in the simplistic chorus.

Plunkett's unique voice accentuates Autograph's distinct sound, as do the inclusion of keyboards (a rarity for hard-rock/heavy metal bands), played by Steve Isham. Drummer Keni Richards and bassist Randi Rand complete Autograph's ranks, making them a fine band with the sound and skills needed to compete in today's world of music and the extra edge needed to get them off the ground.

UNITED TECHNOLOGIES IS LOOKING FOR ANOTHER WATT.

James Watt looked thoughtfully at the Newcomen engine and saw that it was inefficient, expensive, and slow as a mule in mud. He figured out how to improve it, and the Industrial Revolution came to pass.

We could use people like that.

The reason we lead the world in things like aircraft engines, elevators, and air conditioning, is that we're never really satisfied. We keep improving things. Even new things like spacesuits and weapons control systems.

Blood Simple is a promising first film

By Tom Lalli
Campus Correspondent

One of the funniest things about the plot of the wry thriller "Blood Simple" is imagining the poor police detective who, after the credits roll, must tease out all the misunderstandings and double-crosses that have led to three murders. If the stereotype of the literal-minded Southern sheriff is accurate, he or she won't have a chance.

This first effort by New York-bred Joel and Ethan Coen is set in rural Texas. Julian Marty (Dan Hedaya), a bar-owner and eternal cuckold, hires private eye M. Emmet Walsh (the only "name" in the film) to follow his wife Abby (Frances McDormand), who's run off with bar employee Ray (John Getz). The truly unpredictable plot moves which ensue are such that each of these four characters becomes guilty of murder.

"I must have gone money simple," says Walsh's detective at one point, rueing his decision to murder for pay. Thus the title, which refers to madness or recklessness brought on by the sight or smell of blood. One gets the strong impression that none of these quite ordinary characters wants to kill anyone. They are so paranoid, however, so preoccupied with thoughts of murder, that the act itself is almost anticlimactic.

The irony of "Blood Simple" lies in the confusion of the characters, who murder to protect what is theirs

(they think), but actually kill because of misunderstanding and double-crosses. It is as if these people can communicate with each other only through violence. Their lives are gritty and small. Marty, at the beginning of the film, is a vengeful, self-pitying wretch. Soon, though, the other characters become almost distasteful, and sympathies are blurred.

"Blood Simple" has something to say about American society. Walsh's detective, the character who is closest to knowing what is going on, begins the film with the words: "The world is full of complainers; but the fact is, nothing comes with a guarantee." That is later contrasted with Russia, where people are guaranteed their "50¢ a day" (as opposed to $10,000 for a murder contract) and, presumably, their safety. They're not as free, but they don't get murdered so often. Walsh tries to convince himself our way is better; the film questions this.

If all this is beginning to sound like cynical film noir, well, it should. "Blood Simple" is as close as you can get to a noir style in the rural southwest. It is full of neon, motels and bars, night scenes, dripping faucets, and bloody murder. Items such as dead fish, dust, shafts of light and, of course, blood, contribute to the mood of paranoia and imminent death. By the end of the story, it seems there is something about Texas itself that demands murder.

The soundtrack of the film is also clever and deserves mention. Much of the terror in the film is generated aurally, for instance, the hum of the omnipresent ceiling fans is exaggerated to the pitch of a blast furnace, its door opening and closing. The photography, by Barry Sonnenfeld, is also superb, aiding in the visual (rather than verbal) storytelling.

These last techniques, of course, were pioneered by Alfred Hitchcock. "Blood Simple" is inspired by the Master; it quotes "Psycho" (a car that won't sink/start fast enough, also the setting), "The Trouble With Harry" (a husband who won't stay dead), "North by Northwest" (a truck instead of a plane), and "Rear Window" (Thorndike climbing the steps).

As you might expect, though, the Coens have made a film somewhat less genteel than Hitch was wont to. They've focused on chills and thrills, downplaying the aspects of black humor or psychological depth. For this reason, "Blood Simple" is more reminiscent of one of Hitchcock's teleplays (which also took advantage of the fact that murder can be funny) than his films.

Carmichael to open Wykeham series

Popular jazz pianist Judy Carmichael will open the 1985-86 Wykeham Rise Concert Series on Saturday, November 9, at 8 p.m. The series of six concerts is open to the public in the Barnes Room of the Washington, CT, School.

A $10 donation may be made at the door, or a check sent to the Wykeham Rise Concert Series, Washington, CT, 06793, to reserve a seat.

Ms. Carmichael will return to Wykeham for her third performance after a busy year which includes two major New York City concerts. In her Carnegie Recital Hall appearance in September she performed with guitarists Howard Alden and Freddie Green and bass player Red Callendar. A second solo recital is planned for Monday, November 11, at the Grand Hall at Cooper Union.

Ms. Carmichael has also completed two extensive tours of Europe in the past year. In addition, she has made two recordings which are to be released by the end of the year. On a German Label called "Swingtime Records," she is presenting a solo album recorded live in Switzerland. The second album, recorded with Warren Vache, Howard Alden, and Red Callendar, will appear on Statras Records.

...Blood Simple

"Blood Simple" is primarily an extended conceit, a dark joke played out as a filmic exercise. Consequently, it is also unlike Hitchcock's films in that it would not lend itself to repeated viewings. But of course, a film that holds up as well as "Blood Simple" after one viewing is an impressive achievement.

This is a taut and intelligent thriller, disciplined in the extreme, in which everything makes sense in the end. "Blood Simple" is an audacious and promising first film, despite the complaint some have raised that the film is too "Hollywood." It is certainly no New York-art film, but then, don't we need good Hollywood films just as much? As someone once said, the world is full of complainers.

To the guy with light brown hair, brown eyes and nice legs dancing in Crandall C last Thursday. I would love to go for a walk with you some chilly autumn night under the stars. Maybe I could get a real kiss this time. Please respond.

LAURA (NCC Staff) - Clue two - I'm on two too. Happy Halloween! - SP

HELP! I'm being held prisoner in a bottle of orange ink at the printer!

Ethan, It's the last day of October, and the trees are stripped bare, of all they wear. What do I care? October, and kingdoms rise and kingdoms fall, but you go on - and on.

INFINITE SERIES - HAPPY BDAY!!! I'd apologize for this being late, but it's not my fault - so BLEAH! THHAATS NIIIIICE! Live long and prosper. - KATWOMAN

TBTBTB WOMEN Friday was a real blast! I hope you all had fun doing the HOKEY POKEY. We'll have to do it again sometime. HAPPY HALLOWEEN! Love, KATHLEEN

Crystal - I wish that we could have spend more time together this weekend, but it's okay - you're still a good kid and I love ya! Cat

To the lovable circulation manager, you are just such a pumpkin face. Dump your fiance and come over to my pumpkin patch. Forever yours, Harley

A and G Girls - Let's meet at the place we first met. You set the time and date, and we will do whatever you please to make it up to you. Umbrella Men

To the girl who will be the prettiest pink crayon on Halloween. Hope you have a fun Halloween. From a person who loves and cares for you very much, Mike

MEGAN - Happy Halloween. Here's looking at you (this time no wierd goggles). Replacements Fan

Chris the waiter in Batterson C - Do you think the two years we spent together are worth a Weidemann's? I do. Love, Sheri

Tracy, Happy Halloween! I'm so happy you're my big sis! Get psyched for tonight - we're gonna have sooo much fun! Delta Zeta love, Lynn

Adam: Hey sexy - These past few weeks have been fantastic. I can't wait for this weekend. Let's fill our senior year with memories we won't forget. Love, Shirley

To the sexiest witch in the LLC, who smiles for all the guys to see, who shakes her hips to & for, we just wonder where you go, to the library you might say, but we know you are going to play, a hell of a birthday we wish you and may all of your dreams come true! Love, K & K

Chronic Rich - Coke Classic and Suicidal T's. What else is there? Stay cool, stay mellow, and jam at R.E.M. Rob (N.C.G.C.)

Hockey team more competitive than ever

By Paul Venables
Daily Campus Staff

Though it is coming off its best season in the program's history, the hockey team has its work cut out for the '85-'86 season.

The long months of the dryland training program are over, ice practices have tested and reduced the roster to its current 28, an exhibition loss against Princeton has pointed out a strong defense but an unproven offense, and the freshmen's heads have been shaved in the annual initiation. The preseason preparations are indeed over, and the test has arrived. The time has come for head coach Ben Kirtland's squad to take on the toughest schedule ever handed to a Husky hockey team.

When the team travels to Potsdam, New York for a season-opening tournament tomorrow and Saturday, the Huskies will have begun their demanding task that endures halfway through March, with six Division I opponents against the ECAC Division II Huskies along the way.

"This year's schedule is very challenging but at this point we don't really know what to expect," coach Kirtland said. "there are not too many light moments and there are certainly no patsies on the schedule."

No patsies, of course, only six Division I teams including independent powerhouse Merrimack. This season's Huskies just may be receiving their due reward for making the playoffs last year, the first time a UConn team has ever done so.

"It's unusual to play so many Division I teams, this is more than we've ever had on the schedule," Kirtland said. "We have made a lot of progress with the program and to continue to improve we must upgrade the schedule. The fact that we did make the playoffs has set a standard of what we are capable of doing. We have something to live up to."

Kirtland's skaters do have a winning attitude to continue, an attitude that saw last year's team ride a nine game winning streak and compile an 11-3 record down the stretch. From that determined team, 19 letterwinners return and only Bob Falvey and Bruce Marshall were lost to graduation. Marshall has rejoined the team, however, by hanging up his skates and assisting Kirtland behind the bench.

With ex-captains Marshall and Falvey out of uniform, seniors Mark Kosinski and Jim Powers have stepped in as the new team leaders. Even with the big shoes they have to fill, this season's co-captains have done an admirable job.

"They are very good leaders, I rely very heavily on having a good working relation with the captains and they have done a real nice job," Kirtland said.

Kosinski, a true team leader who is in position to become only the 12th Husky ever to score 100 career points, feels that the true test of this year's team lies in the first half of the season.

...Hockey team

"We've only had a short amount of time to get together as a team," Kosinski stated. "We may be following the same pattern as last year (slow start, strong finish). The schedule does let up a little in the second half; in February we have nine home games in a row—that could turn things around. If we can break even in the first half, we would be in good position for a strong finish."

In last weekend's 3-0 exhibition loss to Princeton, coach Kirtland was able to determine what kind of squad he was dealing with: defensive and physical.

"We played a good scrimmage against Princeton," the coach said. "The offense still remains to be seen. We had some genuine threats but just couldn't capitalize on them. In our own zone three goals-against is adequate and we saw some encouragement in the defense."

"We also played a physical game," Kirtland said, "we were able to deliver as much as they gave us. We can be as physical as a game is dictated to us, I like that. It is a needed ingredient for success."

The offense will be led by the scoring lines of Kosinski, junior Chris Tripp, and senior Harry Geary; and junior Todd Krygier, freshman Mark Leonard, and senior Dave Shepard.

"Our core of returning forwards appears to give us a more balanced attack than in past years," Kirtland said, "and you need depth to be effective, more than one line has to produce."

"The defense is relatively young but it is starting to mold together," Kirtland noted.

Sophomore J.T. Marcoux, who stole the starting netminding job after New Year's last year, resolving to lead the Huskies on their second half year, has injured his knee and remains out indefinitely. Junior Jamie Coleman, who lettered as a freshman but sat out last year, has filled in and has given the Huskies a tough one-two goaltending duo.

"The injury to Marcoux shows the strong need for two solid goalies," Kirtland said. "We have that and the way they work together has created a very positive situation."

Strong defense, good goaltending, and an unproven offense mark the Huskies as they embark on their journey through a tough schedule. Though this begins to sound a lot like last season's squad, more offensive depth, 19 returning players, and a year's experience under Marcoux's belt should differentiate the two Husky teams and this team has the ingredients to be competitive with the toughest of opponents. If the Huskies can play relentless, physical hockey, there should be no need for a fantastic finish to make the ECAC playoffs.

Huskies can only be a spoiler in YanCon

By Jim Acton
Sports Editor

It's a position football coach Tom Jackson doesn't want to associate his team with. He tries not to think about it, but with the situation his team has put itself in at this point in the season, it's only obvious.

UConn's only position in post-season play is as a spoiler. Definitely not a contender; just a spoiler. There will be no Yankee Conference title—that was decided last week in the 28-3 loss to Maine. There will be no at-large playoff bid—mediocre teams don't get those.

Yes, sadly enough, the Huskies will be following in the footsteps of such professional teams as the Buffalo Bills, the Cleveland Indians and the New York Knicks, whose only job has been to spoil the playoff aspirations of other teams.

It shouldn't be this way, not with one-third of the season still remaining to play. But in the Yankee Conference, where one loss can determine the difference between champion and runner-up, there is virtually no margin for error. A team cannot afford to let up against any team or not play with intensity.

However, this is exactly what UConn did last week against Maine. After showing great signs of improvement the week before in a 22-2 win over Holy Cross, the Huskies played with all the intensity of a wet dish rag against Maine.

Looking back on the game, Jackson is really at a loss for words.

"It is hard to explain," Jackson said. "Overall, our intensity was a problem. I don't want to lesser our opponent, but something was missing in the game."

"It breaks my heart to see us not play well," Jackson said. "If we go into a game, play our hardest and lose, we can walk off the field and look our opponent in the eye. But to not play to our capabilities is awfully frustrating."

...Football team

The Maine loss was more embarrassing than frustrating. For the second time this season, UConn has held to under five yards rushing. As matter of fact, they gained a whopping two yards on the ground to go along with minus 28 yards against Delaware State.

The frustrating aspect is that these two games sandwiched a brilliant running game against Holy Cross. In that game, junior Marc Mofsowitz led a second half explosion with 126 yards as the Huskies trounced the Crusaders. The offensive line was able to open giant holes for the UConn runners, thus giving the Huskies a running game to go along with their already potent passing game.

But the holes just weren't there last Saturday. So UConn went back to the pass and when it did, the Maine defense rose to the occasion. Lane completed just 12 of 34 pass attempts while the Black Bears intercepted three passes.

"We just haven't been able to get a solid running game to offset the passing," Jackson said. "(Against Maine) we were never in sync; we didn't make the routine plays."

The statistics show just how ineffectiveness UConn's running game has been. The Huskies have run 419 offensive plays in six games and of those 419 plays, 51.6 percent have been pass plays (216 passes and 203 rushing plays). The Huskies have gained 6.6 yards per pass attempt and 1.7 yards per rushing attempt.

Those statistics are the main reason UConn is now 3-2 overall, 0-2 in the conference. They are also the reason the Huskies can only play spoiler.

"I haven't even thought about it (being a spoiler)," Jackson said. "I told the kids Sunday night that there is nothing we can do to alter Saturday. Our first worry is this Saturday."

"We have to play with intensity," Jackson said. "The talent level is too even for us not to play with emotion and intensity."

HUSKY NOTES...The Homecoming clash will begin at 1 p.m. in Memorial Stadium...It is UConn's last home game of the season.

From back page

Coach Wright felt it didn't matter.

"It wouldn't have been much different (had Spaulding started). We had plenty of breakaway opportunities as well as corner chances. Brown was vulnerable to the breakaway because they put a lot of pressure on the ball, trying to take away our ability to carry it," said Wright.

Brown did muster one final threat in hopes of getting back in to the game, but after that was thwarted, the Huskies were on their way to recording their fifteenth victory in sixteen attempts.

UConn now gears for the showdown on Saturday. The Huskies will put their number one ranking on the line as they travel to play UMass, ranked number five. Wright senses the importance of this matchup.

"It's a traditional rivalry. The game will be very competitive, bringing out the best in both teams. You'll see a more open game than you did today, with both teams trying to spread things out. With our number one ranking and their number five ranking it has got to be the biggest game of the year," said Wright.

Hagler suffers injury

PALM SPRINGS, Calif. (AP)—Marvelous Marvin Hagler suffered a nose injury in a sparring session last night, causing postponement of his middleweight championship bout against John Mugabi November 14th. No new date has been released.

Goody Petronelli Hagler's co-manager and trainer said that the 31-year-old boxer suffered lacerations on his nose and three stitches were required to close the wound. Petronelli said "we will still train, but we won't have any contact for a good week. He needs time to heal."

Hagler has been bothered by back problems. He was examined by his doctor last week who said there would be enough time between then and the fight for Hagler to get ready.

Hagler hasn't fought since knocking out Thomas Hearns last April 15th in Las Vegas to retain the undisputed world middleweight title.

Cowboys clean on fix charge

The Dallas Cowboys got some pleasant news today, and it had nothing to do with on-the-field play. Federal agents have concluded that there was no basis to investigate allegations that five members of the club had fixed games in the early 1980's in exchange for cocaine.

Zorn to start for GB

Former Seattle quarterback Jim Zorn, a free-agent signed by Green Bay this season, will be the Packers' starting quarterback in Sunday's game against Chicago. Lynn Dickey has been troubled by injuries along with a motivation problem this season and has thrown seven interceptions in the last two games.

Cards name Gilmer

The St. Louis football Cardinals, looking for someone to recharge their once-explosive offense, have named Harry Gilmer assistant coach in charge of quarterbacks. The Cards, with a 3-5 mark, have scored a total of 37 points in their last four games, all of which were losses.

Jaws named by NFL

Ron Jaworski, who recently regained his starting quarterback's job from rookie Randall Cunningham, has been named the NFL's Player of the Month by the Professional Football Writer's Association. Jaworski, benched in favor of Cunningham after the opening game, took over midway through a loss to New Orleans and led the Eagles to three straight victories.

Browns release Franks

The Cleveland Browns have released five-year veteran defensive end Elvis Franks. He had played every Browns' game from 1980, when he was a fifth-round draft choice out of Morgan State, through 1984. Franks has been on the injured reserve list this season because of a knee problem.

Was it too much baseball?

By J.E. Harris
Campus Correspondent

A few days ago, we were all saying it was too much. Two best-of-seven playoff series before the World Series? Too much baseball. It was almost Halloween and baseball was still with us on TV. My roommate was beginning to show signs of saturation. Too much.

It seemed at anytime we could turn on the TV and see George Brett, in pursuit of a pop foul, flying down some dugout stairs. Anytime, we could sit and watch John Tudor sit and watch. Turn on the tube and there was the Cabbage Patch Man, Whitey Herzog.

There was baseball news with breakfast. Baseball on the radio. Baseball in the papers. Ads with baseball players and managers. There were no letters written. No calls home. No time. There was no psychology read. No Math problems worked out. No time, no time.

And weren't we all part of the Saberhagen family? In the World Series subplot, we were constantly fed updates on Janeane and the overdue baby. We watched Bret talk to his wife on the dugout phone, and saw him point to his stomach "Is it still there?" we read his lips. Then Saturday the official birth announcement was made. Bret gave the vitals, and added, "I can't believe how big it is."

Now, baseball's over. No more baby updates. We won't know when Baby Saberhagen is weened to solids, or the day he talks and says, "Thank goodness I made it for the seventh game."

No, no more Buddy Biancalana stories. No more Tim McCarver jokes. No more baseball highlights on the 11:00 news. No more Pendleton foul pop up catches. No more down-3-games-to-1-Kansas City comebacks. No more visits to the mound. No more doubles. No more errors. No more catches up against the wall. No more shots of the KC fans holding signs like "We Love Daddy Saberhagen" and "Dewey Defeats Truman."

My typewriter is silent. There is no baseball to be found. Anywhere. I looked. The closest I got was Mr. Belvedere with Bob Uecker. Ouch.

I saw two minutes of "Moonlighting"... I might even miss the ABC announcers. Might.

Was there too much baseball? No. Is there ever?

I don't understand my Math problems now. But I know it is four months until Spring Training.

Four months.

Come back, Dane.

Polo teams split

The men's polo team allowed six late goals in a loss to Yale last Saturday. UConn had taken an early 4-1 lead in the first chukker but pulled Matt Singer, a key player on the team, in the second chukker and Yale responded by taking control of play and winning 11-9.

This Saturday the men have a home polo game against the UConn alumni at the polo arena on Horse Barn Hill Road.

The women's polo team registered a win against Yale on Sunday. Some fancy foul shooting by Cathy Warner and a good all around team effort led the team to an 8-7 victory.

This Sunday the women's polo team hosts Cape Cod.

Baseball free agents

(New York)—Here is a list of the baseball players, with position and 1985 team, who have filed for free agency. Players may declare for free agency until November 11th and may sign with their former team until November 12th, when they may sign with any team:

Occupying the number one ranking in college athletics means different things for different teams. College basketball teams dread being voted the top dog heading into the final tournament; everyone is out to get them. Football teams fight to be given the distinction, since winning the national championship depends on the opinion of a collective few. How does the women's field hockey team feel about their new position atop the field? One would think it just creates unnecessary pressure, especially with the NCAA's just a few weeks away. Coach Diane Wright, however, did not see it that way going into yesterday's game with Brown.

"I don't think there is any additional pressure. It was more of an excitement element, coming into this game ranked number one," said Wright.

The Huskies performance proved they didn't feel any added pressure being in the hot seat, as they whipped Brown 4-0. They remained poised as Brown came out and immediately applied pressure in the Huskies' zone. UConn fought off the early challenge, finally managing to clear the ball up to Tracey Fuchs who broke in on net, only to be denied by Brown's goalie, Jennifer Jacobs. This play, however, opened up the action and shortly after, UConn scored their first goal. Fuchs again gained possession of the ball, maneuvered three Brown defensivemen, and shot towards the goal. The shot hit off Jacobs' pad and trickled home, giving UConn the lead.

Four minutes later the Huskies were at it again, with Marjory Abbott taking a corner pass from Lisa Lynch and blasting it past Jacobs to give UConn a 2-0 advantage.

The Huskies were not done yet, continuing to apply pressure in the Brown zone before scoring their third goal with fifteen minutes left in the half. Andrea Giunta picked up the tally knocking in a rebound off a missed shot by Maureen Sauve.

Minutes later Brown sent in their normal starting goalie Mara Spaulder, replacing Jacobs. Spaulder, who sported a 1.06 goals against average coming in, held UConn at bay the rest of the half, while her teammates mounted a minor threat, which included one corner opportunity and a centering pass in front of the goal, but both chances fell by the wayside due to a stingy Husky defense.

The second half saw Brown again start out strong, but despite three early corner chances they still came up empty. The Huskies regained control of the tempo and at 15:30, Carrie Dias got loose on the right side and sent a pass in front of the goal that teammate Donna Garofalo gathered, and snuck past Spaulder, giving UConn their final goal of the game.

It was the only goal Spaulder gave up on the day, recalling that Jacobs had allowed the other three, and one can only speculate what might have happened had she played the entire way.
